

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections.

Indiana's Telephone Privacy law has given me uninterrupted time with my children. The calls always come when we are having family time, homework, or busy with projects around the house. As a single mother with two school age children our quality time is limited and I don't appreciate interruptions two and three times a night from the same companies that call over and over. With the law in effect I don't receive annoying calls and can spend that time with my children.

If I were interested in the products or services these companies are selling I would be calling them.
